

Project Statement:

The University's Football Ticket request system seems misleading and can leave students not knowing if they're able or have a chance of receiving a ticket until only a few days before the game.

Context:

The University of South Carolina's football system is a system almost every student uses and can be disappointed by every week before a home game and completely ruin your weekend. A good work around is having a system that shows an accurate statistic of your chance to actually receiving a ticket and if so what the ticket you're going to receive will actually be. This would help students understand before a game the average amount of points they will likely need to receive a football ticket and what the cutoff will be for an upper and lower level section ticket.
